Medical Malpractice

Medical malpractice injuries are often caused by hospitals cutting back on nursing staff and doctors. As a result, care providers are often stretched to the limit, even while administrative staffs at hospitals are growing. When the doctor is not there to attend to a birthing mother or when a patient's condition is not monitored because the nurse was taking care of another patient, the results can be severe birth injuries, surgical complications, and even wrongful death.

The medical malpractice lawyers of Law Office of Mayer Gordon are very tenacious in helping victims recover maximum compensation for medical injuries caused by:

• Misdiagnosis an illness such as cancer
• Failure to treat an illness on a timely basis
• Failure to order tests
• Failure to consult a specialist
• Failure to monitor or stabilize a patient
• Improper administration of anesthesia (which can cause brain injury by reducing available oxygen, or halting blood flow to the brain entirely)

Birth Injury

The miracle of pregnancy and birth is a wonderful and complicated process, which unfortunately can sometimes go horribly wrong, resulting in painful, debilitating or permanent injuries to the fetus or baby. Sometimes the injury is an unavoidable part of the process of carrying and delivering a baby, but sometimes the injury is the direct and avoidable result of a negligent medical professional, in which case the injury will be considered a birth injury or birth defect. If you believe the injury to your child could have been avoided with proper medical care, you should seek the advise of a birth injury lawyer or birth defect attorney, who can protect your rights and those of your child.

Recent legislation has limited the kinds of damages that may be collected in a birth injury lawsuit, but those that remain do not always have a cap set on the amount it is possible to collect. You may be able to collect compensation for medical expenses and expected future costs of raising and caring for a disabled child, as well as pain and suffering for both parents and child.
